Our Visit to Northampton Last Week

October 28, 2012 By Shawn Decker

In our latest vlog, I fly solo. I was home alone, so I fired up the old phone and decided to explain why we don't have a new video up today. But wait- isn't THIS a video? Yes, it is. Sort of. Just like the others, it was fun to make.

Last week we were on the road, speaking for the great folks at the AIDS Foundation of Western Massachusetts at the Academy of Music in Northampton. We really had a wonderful time- it was such a diverse group in age and HIV status. We met quite a few youth peer educators, along with some folks who have already dedicated decades to fighting the good fight. A great trip, made even more special because we got a chance to spend some time with our friends, Mark and Sasha. Like us, they are in a sero-diverse relationship (he's HIV positive, she is not). But unlike us, they are expecting twins next year!

So it was really cool hang out with them before they embark on the next big adventure in their lives.

Hope this finds you all well. Have a great Halloween!

Positively Yours,
Shawn
