

$85M Awarded to Prevent HIV Among Young Women and Girls

July 19, 2016

Fifty-six winners from 10 sub-Saharan African countries will be awarded a total of $85 million to fight HIV among young women and adolescent girls; $40 million of that will be devoted to keeping girls in secondary school, which lowers a girl's risk for HIV.

The monetary support comes from the U.S. President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief (PEPFAR), Johnson & Johnson's Janssen Pharmaceutica NV (Janssen) and ViiV Healthcare, according to a PEPFAR press release. The 56 winners participated in the DREAMS Innovation Challenge.

DREAMS, an HIV prevention program geared to adolescent girls and young women in 10 sub-Saharan African countries, aims to help girls and young women become Determined, Resilient, Empowered, AIDS-free, Mentored and Safe (DREAMS). It's supported by PEPFAR, Gilead Sciences and the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation, among others. According to the press release, girls and young women make up 75 percent of new HIV infections among adolescents in sub-Saharan Africa. This $85 million investment will help DREAMS reach its goal of reducing new HIV infections among this population by 40 percent by the end of 2017.

"With today's investment, thousands more adolescent girls and young women will have the opportunity to fulfill their dreams," said Ambassador Deborah L. Birx, MD, U.S. global AIDS coordinator and U.S. special representative for global health diplomacy in the press release. "Adolescent girls and young women deserve nothing less, and we are committed to walk with them at every step along the road to an AIDS-free generation."

Nearly 50 percent of the money will go toward keeping girls in secondary school, which strongly correlates to a reduction in the risk of HIV transmission. A recent study in Botswana found that girls who received 10 years of education instead of nine had a nearly 50 percent less chance of becoming infected with HIV.

Of the DREAMS winners, 64 percent are organizations from South Africa, Kenya and Uganda; organizations in Malawi will receive almost half of the education-focused resources. What's more, 18 percent of the winners will focus on employment for adolescent girls and young women, 23 percent on services from local organizations and 9 percent on increasing the impact of HIV/AIDS interventions.

As its name suggests, the ideas and projects these organizations will implement are new and innovative, with many coming from community-based groups. Nearly half of the winners have never received PEPFAR funding, and 64 percent are small, local organizations.
