Columbia University Tops Trojan's Sexual Health Report Card

October 12, 2010

Trojan Condoms released its annual Sexual Health Report Card, a ranking of U.S. universities and colleges, and Columbia University is seeded No. 1, according to a Trojan statement. The report card assigns grade point averages to 141 schools based on data from campus health centers and student opinion polls in 13 categories including condom availability and HIV and STI testing and locality. The higher the grade, the better access students have to sexual health info and resources. Rounding out the top five are Michigan State, Ohio State, the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor and Brown University. In last place was the University of Idaho.
