

Gay Blood Ban Lawsuit Dismissed in China

July 9, 2010

A court in China has dismissed a lawsuit by a gay man against the Red Cross, AFP reports. The man claimed that his blood donation was refused because he was gay. State media say the lawsuit was the first of its kind. Regulations issued by China's health ministry say that "homosexuals and those with multiple sex partners" cannot be donors. The United States also bans blood donations by men who have sex with men.
