

Hey, Babies

June 1, 2008

Federal health guidelines on pediatric HIV delivered a big change this past January: They now recommend that all HIV-positive infants begin HIV meds as soon as they are diagnosed, regardless of their CD4 counts. The guidelines authors cite a large South African study showing that infants have better survival rates if they are on meds, and that HIV often progresses faster in children under 5 than in older children and adults. The authors include advice on ensuring that babies swallow every dose—quite a task, as any mom or dad can tell you. To help with adherence, the guidelines suggest home visits by health care providers and “choos[ing] the most palatable medicine possible—pharmacists may be able to add syrups or flavoring agents to increase palatability.” (Find the guidelines at aidsinfo.nih.gov, or from AIDSinfo, P.O.
