Bad Blood Airing on PBS in June

May 26, 2011 By Shawn Decker

Last year I got to speak with Marilyn Ness for POZ about her documentary, Bad Blood, which details the treatment history of people living with hemophilia and how that ran headfirst into the AIDS crisis, forcing the bleeding disorders community to spearhead safety measures that protect the blood supply.

(It's hard to describe such a great film in a short sentence.)

Anyway, I love it. And it's coming to PBS in early June, so this is your chance to see it! Check the Bad Blood broadcast page for information on when it's airing, and strap yourselves in for an education on how a tragic event can be learned from, and used to benefit others.

Positively Yours,
Shawn
