

A Herpes Control Diet?

February 17, 2011 By Mike Barr

---

We entered the world of Wind in our formulas class yesterday. In Chinese medicine, Wind is responsible for just about any symptom associated with unwanted movement. (Yes, Alice is still deep down the rabbit hole.) Tremors, spasms, twitches foremost among them. But also perceptions of undesired movement--dizziness and vertigo--or the (perceived) absence of the aforementioned: numbness and joint pain. And alas, rash.

Unexplained and stubborn or recurring rashes are said to be challenging to treat by conventional Western medicine. And even in Asian medical school we were counseled once (again, I believe, by the chair of the herbal medicine program at Emperor's College in Santa Monica) that if any among us dared to become "really, really good" at dermatology, we might one day be able to afford that weekend house in the country (or beach) that our peers had closed on and reappointed decades ago.

Herpes, at least in my mind, presents a particular challenge for Chinese medicine because it comprises both the physical manifestation (itching, sometimes burning pain, redness (sometimes whiteness!)) with what Chinese medicine would likely classify as a Heat Toxin: a virus. It would seem that a two pronged approach would be called for: "Disperse Wind" (for the itching) and "Clear Heat" (for the underlying etiology). The classic TCM formula for skin rashes generally is called Xiao Feng San or "Eliminate Wind Powder (from the True Lineage), but I haven't seen much report of its track record against herpes outbreaks as of yet, and still somewhat a skeptic, I find it difficult to believe that a generic "Banish Wind from Skin and Clear (Damp) Heat" formula could really be that effective against such a tenacious (if generally pretty predictable in its appearance and resolution) infection.

Back in the 1980s it seemed that the common wisdom to brace against an impending herpes outbreak was to load up on lysine--and to stay away from foods high in arginine: primarily nuts and chocolate, or so I was told. That approach seemed surprisingly effective. Certainly gobbling down 1 gram tabs of M&Ms royal blue Valtrex often seems like going after a mosquito with an M1 Abrams tank.

I will consult my nutrition bibles here at home: Healing with Whole Foods (Pitchford) and Prescription for Nutritional Healing (Balch). But I suspect that this terrain is well traveled. What have others discovered? What works best? Meantime I will ask around and see what herbal formulas there might be that are effective for nipping an outbreak in the proverbial bud.

Mike Barr is a board certified acupuncturist and herbalist and can be reached at Turning Point Acupuncture (just off Columbus Circle across from the Mandarin Oriental hotel) and at Suite 904 in the Flatiron District. His interests and experience include sports acupuncture, pain syndromes, liver health, immunological support, herbal and acupuncture approaches to getting off/putting off prescription medications of unsatisfactory or unclear benefit, and in helping to manage the side-effects of other necessary and life-saving biomedical interventions. He has also been busy exploring the application of Chinese herbal therapies, and specific acupuncture protocols, for all aspects of sexual health and anti-senescence.

---

© 2026 Smart + Strong All Rights Reserved.

<http://beta.docker.poz.com/blog/herpes-control-diet>