The HIV-positive gay couple in Argentina that was supposed to get married on World AIDS Day were finally married on December 28, the Buenos Aires Herald reports.

Alex Freye, 39, and Jose Maria di Bello, 41, won the right to marry in November. However, a judge later postponed the ceremony.

It took place in Ushuaia, the capital of the province of Tierra del Fuego, where the governor allowed the ceremony to take place.

“As a couple, we have been dreaming with getting married for a long time,” said Freye after the ceremony.

According to the article, a marriage request made in 2007 by two women will be resolved in 2010 by the country’s supreme court.
