I Victory Crouch You by Synthetic Division (Halo Tribute)

October 12, 2011 By Shawn Decker

Did you hear the story last month about how a group of gamers solved a problem with HIV that has been baffling scientists for over a decade? Click here to learn more about how a University of Washington program transforms scientific problems into computer games.

I, on the other hand, use gaming for less noble purposes. Inspired by the insane amount of time I've logged on Halo in the last year, I decided to pay tribute with a Synthetic Division song and music video. The song was co-written with one of my good friends, Micah Consylman. We got together, had a beer, and took turns pecking away at a synthesizer and laying down vocals. Though it's not discovering the elusive structure of a retrovirus protein, I believe "I Victory Crouch You" is more than a song inspired by an act that is perpetrated on fallen opponents in the game. I think this song will have a reverse effect, and eventually inspire scientists to find a cure for HIV so I can dedicate every waking moment of my life to playing video games.

Positively Yours,
Shawn

I Victory Crouch You by Synthetic Division

© 2026 Smart + Strong All Rights Reserved.