Reuters Movie Critic: HOW TO SURVIVE A PLAGUE is 2012's Best Movie So Far

July 9, 2012 By Peter Staley

On a recent edition of CraveOnline's "B-Movies Podcast," a round table of movie critics offered their lists of the top five films of 2012 thus far. Reuters movie critic Alonso Duralde said his pick for the best movie so far this year is HOW TO SURVIVE A PLAGUE, a documentary about AIDS treatment activism during the early ACT UP and TAG years. The film will start a theatrical run in New York and Los Angeles on September 21st, expanding to other cities in the weeks following.

The full podcast is here, with the discussion about HTSAP starting at around the 50 minute mark. Other critics include CraveOnline's William Bibbiani and Witney Seibold, and Dave White with Movies.com (and the deep voice).

I've excerpted the four minutes of the podcast where they discuss HTSAP, which you can listen to below.
