Sick Kid Attends School- Thanks to Robot

February 8, 2011 By Shawn Decker

I missed a lot of school after my HIV diagnosis- sometimes I was sick, sometimes I had a really sore throat... other times I wanted to stay home and play Nintendo. But I never had it as bad as Lyndon Baty, who is living with Polycystic Kidney Disease. His immune system weakened, simple things like going to school can be life-threatening. But thanks to a robot, Lyndon gets to be right there with his class learning instead of at home with a pile of papers and books.

Check out the vid- it's pretty impressive stuff. And be sure to read the whole story on the Huffington Post.
Positively Yours,
Shawn
